NEW QUESTION: 2

A security technician is attempting to access a wireless network protected with WEP. The technician does not know any information about the network. Which of the following should the technician do to gather information about the configuration of the wireless network?

- A. Perform a dictionary attack on the access point to enumerate the WEP key
- B. Capture client to access point disassociation packets to replay on the local PC's loopback
- C. Spoof the MAC address of an observed wireless network client
- D. Ping the access point to discover the SSID of the network

Answer: C

Explanation:

With ARP spoofing (also known as ARP poisoning), the MAC (Media Access Control) address of the data is faked. By faking this value, it is possible to make it look as if the data came from a network that it did not. This can be used to gain access to the network, to fool the router into sending data here that was intended for another host, or to launch a DoS attack. In all cases, the address being faked is an address of a legitimate user, and that makes it possible to get around such measures as allow/deny lists. Note: As an example, the initialization vector (IV) that WEP uses for encryption is 24-bit, which is quite weak and means that IVs are reused with the same key. By examining the repeating result, it was easy for attackers to crack the WEP secret key. This is known as an IV attack.

NEW QUESTION: 3

Based on the network shown in the graphic

Which option contains both the potential networking problem and the protocol or setting that should be used to prevent the problem?

- A. switching loops, split horizon
- B. routing loops, hold down timers
- C. switching loops, STP
- D. switching loops, VTP
- E. routing loops, STP
- F. routing loops, split horizon

Answer: C

Explanation:

The Spanning-Tree Protocol (STP) prevents loops from being formed when switches or bridges are interconnected via multiple paths. Spanning-Tree Protocol implements the 802.1D IEEE algorithm by exchanging BPDU messages with other switches to detect loops, and then removes the loop by shutting down selected bridge interfaces. This algorithm guarantees that there is one and only one active path between two network devices.
