NEW QUESTION: 2

In order to recognize the practical aspects of multilevel security in which, for example, an unclassified paragraph in a Secret document has to be moved to an Unclassified document, the Bell-LaPadula model introduces the concept of a:

- A. Simple security property
- B. Trusted subject
- C. Secure exchange
- D. Data flow

Answer: B

Explanation:

The model permits a trusted subject to violate the *-property but to comply with the intent of the *-property. Thus, a person who is a trusted subject could move unclassified data from a classified document to an unclassified document without violating the intent of the *-property. Another example would be for a trusted subject to downgrade the classification of material when it has been determined that the downgrade would not harm national or organizational security and would not violate the intent of the *-property. The simple security property (ss-property), answer "Simple security property", states that a subject cleared for one classification cannot read data from a higher classification. This property is also known as the no read up property. Answers Secure exchange and Data flow are distracters.
