NEW QUESTION: 1
You have a server named Server1 that runs Windows Server 2012 R2. Server1 has the File Server Resource Manager role service installed.
Each time a user receives an access-denied message after attempting to access a folder on Server1, an email notification is sent to a distribution list named DL1.
You create a folder named Folder1 on Server1, and then you configure custom NTFS permissions for Folder 1.
You need to ensure that when a user receives an access-denied message while attempting to access Folder1, an email notification is sent to a distribution list named DL2. The solution must not prevent DL1 from receiving notifications about other access-denied messages.
What should you do?
A. From the File Server Resource Manager console, create a share for Folder1 by selecting the SMB Share - Advanced option.
B. From the File Explorer, modify the Classification tab of Folder1.

C. From the File Server Resource Manager console, create a local classification property.
D. From File Explorer, modify the Customize tab of Folder1.
Answer: A
Explanation:
Explanation/Reference:
Explanation:
When using the email model each of the file shares, you can determine whether access requests to each file share will be received by the administrator, a distribution list that represents the file share owners, or both.
The owner distribution list is configured by using the SMB Share - Advanced file share profile in the New Share Wizard in Server Manager.
