NEW QUESTION: 1

You work in a company which is named Wiikigo Corp. The company uses SQL Server 2008. You are the administrator of the company database.

Now you are in charge of a SQL Server 2008 instance. There is a database named DB1 in the instance.

The company stores clients data in DB1. Clients can access their profile data by using a Web application.

You must ensure the security of the customer data, you must ensure that even if the backup media is lost, data files, log files and subsequent backups and so on are quite safe.

So what action should you perform to achieve this goal?

- A. You should make the CustomerDB database accessible only through stored procedures and functions.
- B. For both the CustomerDB database and the master database, enable Transparent Database Encryption.
- C. For the CustomerDB database, enable Transparent Database Encryption and back up the transaction log.
- D. You should use the built-in encryption functions to encrypt the sensitive data at the cell level.

Answer: C

Explanation:

You can take several precautions to help secure the database such as designing a secure system, encrypting confidential assets, and building a firewall around the database servers. However, in a scenario where the physical media (such as drives or backup tapes) are stolen, a malicious party can just restore or attach the database and browse the data. One solution is to encrypt the sensitive data in the database and protect the keys that are used to encrypt the data with a certificate. This prevents anyone without the keys from using the data, but this kind of protection must be planned in advance.

Transparent data encryption (TDE) performs real-time I/O encryption and decryption of the data and log files. The encryption uses a database encryption key (DEK), which is stored in the database boot record for availability during recovery. The DEK is a symmetric key secured by using a certificate stored in the master database of the server or an asymmetric key protected by an EKM module. TDE protects data "at rest", meaning the data and log files. It provides the ability to comply with many laws, regulations, and guidelines established in various industries. This enables software developers to encrypt data by using AES and 3DES encryption algorithms without changing existing applications.
